every minute detail, including some of the common technical difficulties that are often encountered in each procedure, and how these could be resolved. Occasionally though, detailed information provided, as in the knowledge expected of the trainees in terms of equipment, may be too detailed for a busy practicing clinician, especially in the chapter on understanding electrosurgery.

With a team which varies from the experienced and foremost exponents of minimal access surgery, to the very youthful and enthusiastic sub-specialists, the authors come from institutions which vary from busy district hospitals to the major University Teaching Centers. They thus form a unique mix part of the best that could have been gathered to introduce the trainee to a very delicate, even if, interesting subject. "Introduction to Gynecological Endoscopy" is indeed a book to train the trainers of trainees in gynecological endoscopic surgery. It will surely encourage the young gynecologists to understand better the nature and scope of the subject of gynecological endoscopy to the fullest.

Abdulaziz Meshary
Department of Obstetrics & Gynecology
King Saud University
College of Medicine
PO Box 2925
Riyadh 11426
Kingdom of Saudi Arabia

ERRATA NOTICE

The Saudi Medical Journal Office would like to apologise to Dr. Mohamed E. Abd El Bagi and Professor Hussein Al Freihi with regards to their Letter to the Editor "Challenges encountered in commissioning of new health care facilities: Radiology Department Experience" published in January/February Issue Vol 19. The name of Professor Hussein Al Freihi was omitted by the Editorial Board.